

Core	Non-Core
activities under this Act, including activities relating to collective bargaining and representation of members.	general social causes or issues collectively advancing and advocating for workplace goals, including creating public awareness, and lobbying if the activity directly benefits dues payers in the workplace.	charities or non-governmental organizations participating in legal proceedings if the activity directly benefits dues payers in the workplace.	organizations or groups affiliated with or supportive of a political party complying with obligations under enactments if the activity directly benefits dues payers in the workplace.	An activity that does not directly benefit dues payers in the workplace supporting or representing dues payers in proceedings, investigations or hearings related to their employment if the activity directly benefits dues payers in the workplace.
educating and training dues payers.
providing benefits, establishing funds and providing money to dues payers in relation to their employment if the activity directly benefits dues payers in the workplace.
negotiating and administering collective agreements to which the trade union is a party if the activity directly benefits dues payers in the workplace.
engaging in activities that relate to the operation and governance of the trade union, including developing and maintaining the trade union's bylaws and constitution; administration of the trade union; recruiting new members in preparation for certification of the trade union under the Act; educating and training the staff of the trade union and operating hiring halls and other means of assigning work if the activity directly benefits dues payers in the workplace.	